Heritage Listing Information

Several lists of heritage properties or sites have been used to create this document. The explanations below outline the criteria attached to each of these lists.

Where a property or site has been registered, the appropriate coloured box contains the registration number along with other site information.

Local Government Inventories

A local government inventory (previously referred to as a municipal inventory) is a list of places of local heritage significance established by a local government. No protection is afforded to places listed on this type of inventory unless the list is linked to a town planning scheme.

Local government heritage inventories can assist local governments to:

- provide a cultural and historic record of the local district
- determine local government conservation policies
- provide information about local heritage that may be required under a town planning scheme for that district.

State Register of Heritage Places

The Heritage Council of Western Australia maintains the State Register under the Heritage of Western Australia Act 1990 to protect and recognise places of cultural heritage significance within our State. The register includes buildings, structures, gardens, cemeteries, landscapes, archaeological sites and more. Entry is assessed on aesthetic, historic, scientific and social values, rarity and representativeness.

Owners of places on the State Register are eligible for grants and incentives. After the Heritage Council carries out a thorough assessment of the heritage place, the ultimate decision to list a place rests with the Minister for Heritage. Several lists of heritage properties or sites have been used to create this document. The explanations below outline the criteria attached to each of these lists.

Department of Aboriginal Affairs

The Aboriginal Heritage Act 1972 (the Act):

- defines the meaning of “Aboriginal site” in Section 4 of the Act
- protects all Aboriginal sites whether or not they are recorded on the Register of Aboriginal Sites or otherwise known to the Registrar of Aboriginal Sites, Department of Aboriginal Affairs or the Aboriginal Cultural Material Committee.
- provides for “offences relating to Aboriginal sites” in Section 17.

An Aboriginal site may:

- exist in any area of Western Australia.
- not have been recorded in the Register of Aboriginal Sites or elsewhere.
- not have been identified in previous heritage surveys or reports on that area but remains fully protected under the Act.

Therefore, the absence of any reference to an Aboriginal site in any area is not conclusive. Consultation with relevant Aboriginal communities and native title claimants is recommended to identify any additional Aboriginal sites that may exist and what, if any further heritage surveys may be required

Register of the National Estate

Register of the National Estate (RNE) is a list of natural, Indigenous and historic heritage places throughout Australia.

It was originally established under the Australian Heritage Commission Act 1975. Under that Act, the Australian Heritage Commission entered more than 13,000 places in the register. In 2004, responsibility for maintaining the Register shifted to the Australian Heritage Council, under the Australian Heritage Council Act 2003 (AHC Act).

Following amendments to the Australian Heritage Council Act 2003, the Register of the National Estate (RNE) was frozen on 19 February 2007, which means that no new places can be added, or removed.

The Register will continue as a statutory register until February 2012.

During this period the Minister for the Environment, Heritage and the Arts (the Minister) is required to continue considering the Register when making some decisions under the Environment Protection and Biodiversity Conservation Act 1999 (EPBC Act).

This transition period also allows states, territories, local and the Australian Government to complete the task of transferring places to appropriate heritage registers where necessary and to amend legislation that refers to the RNE as a statutory list.

From February 2012 all references to the Register will be removed from the EPBC Act and the AHC Act. The RNE will be maintained after this time on a non-statutory basis as a publicly available archive.

On 1 January 2004, a new national heritage system was established under the Environment Protection and Biodiversity Conservation Act 1999 (EPBC Act). This led to the introduction of the National Heritage List, which was designed to recognise and protect places of outstanding heritage to the nation, and the Commonwealth Heritage List, which includes Commonwealth owned or leased places of significant heritage value.

The establishment of this national system was in line with a 1997 agreement by the Council of Australian Governments that each level of government should be responsible for protecting heritage at the appropriate level. The Australian Government's role in relation to heritage is to focus on protecting places of world and national heritage significance and on ensuring Commonwealth compliance with state heritage and planning laws. Each state and territory government, and local government, has a similar responsibility for its own heritage.

As a result, there was a significant level of overlap between the Register of the National Estate and heritage lists at the national, state and territory, and local government levels.

Status: Indicative

Data provided to or obtained by the Australian Heritage Council or the former Australian Heritage Commission has been entered into the database and the place is at some stage in the assessment process. A decision on whether the place should be entered in the Register has not been made.

Status: Interim

The place was in the Interim List at 1 January 2004 when the Australian Heritage Commission was abolished. The place had been publicly proposed for entry in the Register.

Status: Registered

The place is in the Register of the National Estate. Although some places may be legally registered because they are within a larger registered area they may not necessarily possess intrinsic significance.

National Trust of Australia (WA) Classified List

The National Trust of Australia (WA) (or NTWA) is the pre-eminent, independent community based heritage organisation in Western Australia. It was established by the National Trust of Australia (W.A.) Act 1964.

It maintains a Classified List of heritage sites and properties that have been assessed by an expert technical committee as significant under the Burra Charter. This list includes buildings, precincts, cemeteries, natural landscapes, monuments and other historic sites. Currently (2011) there are over 1700 classified items on the list.

Classification by the NTWA has no legal status, so the rights of owners or custodians of sites are not impinged in any way. It is an acknowledgement that a property or site has heritage significance and it is hoped that owners and custodians will respect this classification. The NTWA will offer conservation advice and will support any applications for financial assistance through funding bodies such as Lotterywest.
